2018 Mellon Fellows Application Form

The Mexico Center at the University of Texas at San Antonio (UTSA) and the Mellon Humanities Pathways Fellowship Program will fund 12 undergraduate students to support humanities research training that promotes diversity and prepares students from underrepresented backgrounds for doctoral study in the humanities broadly defined. The training program will provide students with an introduction to humanities research methods, meaningful opportunities to participate in humanities research studies, networking and professional development, and mentoring that leads to doctoral study in the humanities.

The interdisciplinary training program's Latinos in a Changing World theme focuses on research in literature, art, music, history, communications, philosophy, classics, ethnic studies, gender studies, Afro-Latino identities, anthropology, sociology, geography, languages, media, art history, and other humanities fields. This fellowship program cannot fund students in political science, education, business, public policy, economics, psychology, or sciences and engineering.

In the fall semester, the fellows will participate in an informal interdisciplinary seminar consisting of activities to improve research and writing skills and to help them identify appropriate graduate programs. In the spring semester, fellows will participate in ongoing research apprenticeships with UTSA faculty mentors in the humanities (7-10 hours per week) and participate in site visits to Texas universities offering Ph.D. humanities programs. In the summer, fellows will participate in a 3-week Professionalization Workshop at UTSA that will address research related to Latinos in a Changing World, humanities academic/research careers, academic skills and methodology used in humanities programs, research design, and requirements for Ph.D. programs. In the fall of the fellows' senior year, staff and mentors will assist fellows in applying to graduate humanities programs.

Fellows who are selected for the training program will receive a total stipend of $4,000 and a small research fund which will be disbursed as they participate in and complete the project activities. Mellon Humanities Pathways fellows must complete all program activities and apply for graduate programs to receive the stipend. The next cohort of 12 fellows will be selected at the beginning of the 2018 Fall semester.
